to Grow Intellectually and Morally.

The large congregation at the First Methodist Episcopal church heard an interesting sermon yesterday morning In a unique and impressive manner Dr. Short presented the parable of the talents and drew therefrom important essons. He said:

"Two classes appear in this parable -the master and the servant. Each is responsible to the other and each is is responsible to the other and each is the complement of the other. The master herein was a man plus what he had gathered about him. The servants were men plus what was given to them to invest. They had their opportunity to become masters and two of them did. One did not. The world had not treated him fairly and he simply would not even put the one talent in a bank that he receive a bit of in-
